Corruption Prosecutions and Their Pitfalls: Recognizing, Engaging, Surviving and Overcoming the Maze of Obstacles and Challenges for Law Enforcement

Based on experience and marked by periodic anecdotes, this presentation analyzes the often-unexpected (and sometimes subtle but critical) obstacles to effectively investigating and prosecuting public corruption cases of all types. These range from economic bribery and extortion cases resulting from the (often-reluctant) complicity of business people who comply with illegal demands under duress, to the need to earn and keep the hearts and minds of the press and public upon whom law enforcement depends, to the equally important task of steeling oneself and staff against universally, increasingly-proactive and aggressive offensives by subjects and defendants. It also addresses the necessity of investigators, prosecutors, and staff to aggressively discharge their Brady and other disclosure obligations, while utilizing methods and maintaining lifestyles which are unfailingly fair and beyond reproach, with little or no room for error.

Government Investigations, Part III: Moving Forward

What happens when the internal investigation uncovers evidence of possible wrongdoing? How might you handle bad facts, difficult investigation witnesses, and the dreaded "smoking gun" document? This panel explores the considerations and best practices in proceeding, including the possibility of continued voluntary cooperation, what to do when the government's case is ill-founded, understanding the government's focus, isolating critical documents and key witnesses, dealing with an Achilles heel, and considerations for early settlement.
