Open Source: The Era of Litigation and Enforcement Is Upon Us

The last two years have seen the First U.S. Circuit level opinion in an open source case, and the first lawsuits by FSF and SFLC. Corporations are beginning to file claims to enforce GPL. Open source lawsuits are unique—they require an informed analysis of open source legal issues, understanding of the political landscape, and spin control. This session comprises a discussion how to react to open source claims, including lawsuits, and how to avoid becoming a household name in open source enforcement.
