FCPA and UK Bribery Act Risks and Compliance

Technology companies continue to be in the FCPA enforcement crosshairs of the U.S. Department of Justice and SEC. Since 2004, the computer and technology sector has been the fifth most investigated for potential foreign bribery; out of the more than 90 companies that are reportedly being investigated for FCPA violations, approximately one sixth of them are high-tech, including companies like IBM, Oracle, Hewlett Packard and Motorola Solutions. The emergence of the UK Bribery Act and other local anti-corruption laws creates additional risks for the sector. Learn recent enforcement trends, specific foreign bribery risks that tech companies often confront overseas, and best practices for addressing compliance.

Topics include computer usage policies, records management and information governance, as well as recent developments in eDiscovery law (e.g., predictive coding, proportionality, discovery of social media content, discovery of personal devices' data pursuant to BYOD policy, sanctions, spoliation and obstruction); strategies for reducing unnecessary eDiscovery costs (e.g., early ESI identification and case assessment); and judicial approaches to managing eDiscovery in the courts (e.g., procedural issues, production disputes, noncooperation, noncompliance with court orders, production and privilege issues, proportionality, privilege waiver, model orders, and use of special discovery masters).

The Evolving Intersection of Technology and HIPAA

Technologies will continue to evolve in the next few years—including medical mobile devices, patient portals, voice-activated smart phones and Google glasses—giving healthcare providers and patients immediate, real-time access to healthcare information. While these technologies create new opportunities, they also present greater risks to the security of such information, potential regulatory penalties for breaches, and specific FDA licensing requirements. Healthcare providers and their IT vendors need to be aware of the state and federal compliance requirements to avoid penalties and protect their businesses.

Great group of speakers – knowledgeable, engaging and communicated information well.

Topics are very relevant to my practice as IP counsel in-house. This is the best conference I've attended.

All very informative and educational.

Excellent presenters with a variety of different styles, useful and cutting-edge topics, relevant handouts that will be useful for future reference. This is a terrific conference—it clearly means a lot to both the presenters and the audience.

The flow of topics and quality of speakers is very good. I like the overall approach of all the speakers to emphasize practice tips.

The program has a wonderful mix of diverse technology-related topics.

Course format/content is logically presented. Speakers are knowledgeable in the area of their presentations.

Keep up the good work. I encountered virtually every topic in the last twelve months.
