Remote Work Force

In the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, higher education employers are fielding increased requests from employees, ranging from faculty to operations, to work on a remote, multi-jurisdictional basis. Balancing talent retention goals against the risks associated with such arrangements -- including employment, workplace safety, benefits, payroll, immigration, intellectual property, state and local taxes and permanent establishment -- is critical for a long-term, sustainable approach to these requests. Please submit your questions in advance to ConferenceQA@utcle.org.
