

Advocacy Rules Beyond
the IRC:
*Federal and State Lobbying and Ethics Compliance

Objectives

- To provide an overview of the laws and regulations that govern lobbying by nonprofits other than those imposed by the Internal Revenue Code, using the federal rules as a primary example; and
- To provide tools and recommendations for considering and analyzing the application of state and local lobbying rules and requirements to the advocacy activities of a nonprofit.

Key Takeaways

- Under the federal lobbying law and almost all state and local laws, “lobbying” is defined more broadly than under the IRC.
- Virtually no lobbying statutes provide exceptions specifically for nonprofits, which are generally treated the same as other entities engaged in advocacy.
- Registration and reporting obligations are not typically onerous and should not discourage advocacy – but note that there can be other implications for both the organization and the individual lobbyist(s).

- Lobbying regulators generally provide comprehensive and helpful guidance for filers and should be consulted before registering.
- Formal enforcement and significant penalties are rare; public attention and reputational harm are the greater risk.
- Organizations engaged in advocacy are well advised to have in place policies, procedures, and training re: lobbying issues and compliance.

Recent Trends

- More expansive regulation of lobbying
- Broader definitions of “lobbying”
- More frequent and more detailed reporting
- Enhanced enforcement and criminal penalties for violations of lobbying laws
- More restrictive gift and ethics rules for government officials (before, during, and after government service)
- More strict ethics requirements when gifts, invitations, etc. are from lobbyists
