³ The author is licensed to practice law only in Louisiana. This paper, while it refers to and discusses the law of states other than Louisiana, reflects an outsider's view of the laws and jurisprudence of those states.

Rev. 955 (2005); Jill Barclift, "CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY: ENSURING INDEPENDENT JUDGMENT OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL--A LOOK AT STOCK OPTIONS Z," 81 North Dakota Law Review 1 (2005); Frederick M. ⁵ For example, in addition to treaties and other matters that affect international transactions, there is the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), an inter-governmental body whose purpose is the development and promotion of national

Model Rules of Professional Conduct and the rules as adopted (and sometimes modified) by the various states in which we are licensed to practice. Practical problems abound and the potential ethical problems are huge. There are many Internet resources on ethics that may provide a starting point for research and links to a number of useful sites.⁶

Transactional lawyers exist to do deals. We negotiate with parties concerning the creation of entities. We negotiate with or for corporations and partnerships, lenders and borrowers, developers and contractors, and a myriad of other clients and businesses. We negotiate with local, state, and national governmental entities. We document deals at the front end, work through issues as deals are ongoing, and negotiate work-outs at the back-end if and when things go wrong.

We usually do all of this from the confines of our offices, using land-lines, email, the Internet, smart-phones, and all the accoutrements of modern practice, and, since the advent of Covid19, often while telecommuting from our homes. Yet, regardless of where we sit, our deals often extend around the country and sometimes around the globe.

We tend to think that we are fully conversant with the “ethical” rules that apply within our own state, but can we really rely on these rules when our deals are interstate or international?

This paper focuses on just a few of the ABA Model Rules that relate to multijurisdictional transactional practices today. These involve matters that cross state and international policies to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. FATF seeks to generate legislative and regulatory changes to combat international money laundering.
