Departing Employee Problems: Non-compete

- Where permissible, non-competes are the cleanest mechanism to prevent a former employee from competing against a former employer.
  - State laws on enforceability of covenants not to compete vary dramatically from state to state.
  - Aside from limits on them under some state laws, venue and personal jurisdiction can be an issue.
  - If a contract is overbearing it may be void or in some states revised, “blue-penciled” by the court.
  - Some courts may still require separate proof of irreparable injury for an injunction.

4

Non-Compete: Choice of Law

---

- Can you get a non-compete under the law of the relevant state?
  - Some states have laws that expressly render them void in the employment context (e.g., California, Oregon, Colorado, others).
  - Trend to bar non-competes for non-exempt employees or for people laid off or terminated without cause.
  - Massachusetts 2018 statute has advance notice requirements, and a garden leave payment provision.
  - Some states laws expressly condone and even permit modification of them to preserve their validity (“Blue Pencil” states, e.g., New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Texas).
  - Some states require separate proof that non-compete is necessary for a legitimate business reason: protect trade secrets, protect confidential information and protect goodwill.

“Blue Pencil” States Allow Revision to Preserve Validity of Non-Competes

- Texas is a “blue pencil” state.
- Texas Business and Commerce Code § 15.51(c), if the duration or geography are unreasonable, “the court shall reform the covenant to the extent necessary to cause the limitations contained in the covenant as to time, geographical area, and scope of activity to be restrained to be reasonable and to impose a restraint that is not greater than necessary to protect the goodwill or other business interest of the promisee and enforce the covenant as reformed . . . .”
- Other blue pencil states include Arizona, Delaware, Kentucky, North Carolina, etc.
