This is a round-up in a week-long series examining the high stakes and potential impact of one of the most-watched federal lawsuits — the so-called Mohr and Stitzer case — taking direct aim at how homebuyer-pay commissions.

The past several years in real estate have seen an unprecedented amount of upheaval. Obviously, there's the economic meltdown. Before that, large amounts of money poured into housing and fueled entirely new segments, such as flipping. Technology has become ubiquitous. The list could go on.

Decoupling broker commissions could be coming

Agent commissions of the future could look much different than they do today, as a Department of Justice investigation into the issue of decoupling buyer and broker commission continues, class action lawsuits are advancing and associates and MLIs are adjusting their policies.

Those scrubbing the coupling of commissions argue it offers competition in the market and violates antitrust laws, while those defending the status quo say the system of paying sales agent commissions paid by their clients strengthens the market and makes it less expensive for the first-time buyer.

This arrangement of coupling commissions, promoted by the National Association of REALTORS and most real estate brokerages across the nation, where the seller broker usually pays half of the commission to the buyer broker, makes it difficult if not impossible for the buyer to negotiate the compensation rate.

Game-Changing Broker Commission Lawsuits

Moehrl v. The National Association of Realtors, No.
492 F. Supp. 3d 768 (N.D. Ill. 2020)

Facts: An antitrust lawsuit filed by home sellers, who listed properties on 20 Multiple Listing Services (MLSs), against Defendants, the National Association of Realtors, Realty Holdings Corp., HomeServices of America, Inc., RE/Max Holdings, Inc., and Keller Williams Realty, Inc.

Claims: Home sellers accuse Defendants of conspiring to require home sellers through a Mandatory Rule Adopted by NAR (“the Buyer Broker Commission Rule”) to pay buyer brokers at an inflated commission amount, in violation of federal antitrust law. Plaintiffs challenge NAR’s adoption and implementation of a mandatory rule requiring all brokers to make a blanket, non-negotiable offer of buyer broker compensation (the “Buyer Broker Commission Rule”) when listing a property on a MLS.

Moehrl v. NAR, et. al.

Moehrl v. The National Association of Realtors

Case Impact:

- * If successful, Plaintiffs’ lawsuit will fundamentally shift how buyer agents are compensated in the U.S. and how much they are compensated.
- * Could signal a move to less buyer-agent involvement as more homeowners find properties online and work directly with seller agents.
- * Case is brought as an antitrust action. With class action status, damages could reach $41B Dollars (Source: Inman).
- * Case criticizes buyer agents from receiving mandatory commission in instances where buyer agents play no role or a passive role in the process.

Sitzer/Burnett v. NAR, et. al.

Facts: Another lawsuit filed against NAR and others challenging commission payment practices in relation to buyer broker compensation. Case is similar to the Moehrl v. NAR case.

Significance: A federal judge in Missouri granted Plaintiffs class-action status which widens the class of potential Plaintiffs and places more pressure on the real estate industry as a whole when it comes to how brokers are compensated.

Case Citation: Sitzer v. National Association of Realtors, 420 F.Supp.3d 903 (W.D. Mo. 2019).
