The number of city related bills as a percentage of total bills filed rises every year. Many have eroded municipal authority related to development matters, including annexation, eminent domain, zoning, regulatory takings, building codes, short-term rentals, and subdivision regulations, among others.

For better or worse, city officials have to live with all the laws that are approved by the legislature and navigate them carefully.

New state law prevents cities from regulating construction materials

HB 2439 was signed by Gov. Abbott and went into effect this month

New law may change aesthetics of communities across Texas

Construction workers frame a house Tuesday at the corner of Cody Lane and Doris Drive, in north Denton. A new state law limits what cities can do to regulate construction materials used by homebuilders.

H.B. 2439

- Provides that a city may not adopt or enforce a rule, charter provision, ordinance, order, building code, or other regulation that:
 - Prohibits or limits, directly or indirectly, the use or installation of a building product or material in the construction, renovation, maintenance, or other alteration of a residential or commercial building if the building product or material is approved for use by a national model code published within the last three code cycles; or
 - Establishes a standard for a building product, material, or aesthetic method in construction, renovation, maintenance, or other alteration of a residential or commercial building if the standard is more stringent than a standard for the product, material, or aesthetic method under a national model code published within the last three code cycles
