Priority Guidance Plan (10/03/24) (continued)

- Regulations addressing (continued):
 - Whether anti-“clawback” rule should apply to gifts includible in gross estate (Treas. Reg. Section 20.2010-1(c))
 - Imposition of restrictions on estate assets during six-month alternate valuation period ((IRC Section 2032(a))
 - GST exemption allocation issues including how and when to obtain extension of time (IRC Section 2642(g)), definition of GST trust and ordering rules when allocation exceeds exemption available

- Michael's estate's Form 706 reflected value of Crown C shares as $3 million – the redemption price
- Following examination of Michael's estate tax return, IRS issued Notice of Deficiency, asserting value of Michael's Crown C shares should be determined taking insurance proceeds used to redeem Michael's shares, but not stock purchase agreement, into account
- In the ensuing litigation, government and estate stipulated that the value of Crown C at Michael's death, not counting those insurance proceeds, was $3.86 million

- Supreme Court, in unanimous opinion authored by Justice Thomas, held insurance proceeds used to redeem Michael's shares were includable in value of company for Michael's estate tax purposes
- Reasoning was that:
 - Fair market value redemption obligation has no impact on the value of any shareholders' equity interest; and so
 - Hypothetical buyer of Michael's shares would have paid $5.3 million ($6.86 million x 77.18%)
