When does a conflict become a prohibited conflict?

Your clients may have conflicts with each other:

- Clients may be antagonistic against each other (personal conflicts)
- Clients may compete against each other in the marketplace (economic conflicts)
- One client may be a material witness in a lawsuit involving another client (litigation conflicts)

Conflicts of Interest – In General

You have an “interest” subject to a “conflict” when the relationship between you and a third party requires the following:

- Loyalty
 - Faithfulness to commitments or obligations
 - Advance the other party’s interest over anyone else’s, including your own
- Good Faith
 - Duty of Care
- Independent Judgment
 - Can you advise without having to show deference to another client?
 - Can you exercise professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclosing courses of action that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of the client?

What if we add a few more facts?:

- Oil Company is operator on lands where title is being ran (Operator recently purchased leases). ExploreCo is a non-operator in the same leases and lands and is considering acquiring Oil Company's interest. Both Oil Company and ExploreCo employ Landman Brokerage A to run title in the same lands.
- While Landman Brokerage A is running title, a top-leasing Third Party sues both Oil Company and ExploreCo in attempt to get lease terminated due to lack of producing quantities from well.
- Attorney examines title based on Landman Brokerage B's work and drafts an oil and gas title opinion for Oil Company. The oil and gas title opinion contains a title requirement concerning a complex series of transactions in the chain of title and requires a stipulation of interest from the affected parties and instructs Oil Company to suspend proceeds attributable to this interest until title requirement is satisfied. One of the affected parties in the title requirement wants to hire the Attorney's law firm to represent them in a trespass to try title action concerning the facts addressed in the title requirement against the other parties named in the title requirement.
