Topics To be Covered

- History
- Eligibility To Terminate
- Who May Terminate
- When To Terminate
- Notice Contents + Requirements + Common Pitfalls
- Nuanced Issues + Case Review

2

Brief History

- Copyright Act of 1909
  - Copyright duration of 28 years (initial term), and renewal term of 28 years
  - Allow authors the opportunity to terminate contracts, recapture rights and enter into new deals
  - Did not work in practice
    - Publishers and other large rights holders would require assignment of renewal rights
- In approaching the Copyright Act of 1976, goal was to make termination rights inalienable
  - But, end result produced an overly complex, burdensome and expensive challenge for authors

3

Eligibility

- 17 USC §§ 304
  - Grants or licenses of copyrights executed by the author or author's heirs before January 1, 1978
  - AND only if the copyright in the work was secured before January 1, 1978
- 17 USC §§ 203
  - Grants or licenses of copyrights executed by the author on or after January 1, 1978
  - Does not matter if the copyright in the work was secured before or after January 1, 1978
- Gap Grant Issue

4

Ineligibility + Other Notable Issues

- Grants made via will
- Works made for hire
  - Works created by an employee within scope of employment
  - Works specially commissioned provided there is a written agreement and the work falls under one of the 9 designated categories of works under the Copyright Act
- Derivative Works
  - Derivative work created under a grant prior to its termination can be utilized under the terms of the grant post-termination
  - But, can't prepare new derivative works
- Only affects U.S. rights; ex-U.S. rights not affected

5

Issue: Works Made For Hire / Loan-Out Companies

- Corporate entities cannot be the author of a work unless the work is created in a work-for-hire capacity
- Works made for hire cannot be terminated and recaptured
