Definition of “Special Needs” for the SSI Program

- Payment directly to providers for any goods that are not countable as resources; or
- Payment for any services used by the beneficiary;
- Except each month’s unreimbursed payments for food or shelter are counted as having a value not exceeding one-third of the maximum SSI monthly benefit rate plus $20.
- And don’t give the beneficiary cash or anything so easily converted to cash that it counts as a resource.

Your Authors' Definition of "Special Needs"

- "Special Needs": any help to be furnished in-kind (not cash or easily converted to cash) that is not counted by the benefit program as income or resources.
- Most Medicaid programs use the "methodology" (definitions of "resources" and "income") of the SSI program.
- However, there are some important differences among programs. See Appendix 3: Three Ways Different Medicaid Programs Define "Income"

A Trustee Must Always Determine--

- Which program(s) do(es) the beneficiary have or need?
- Which of the three categories is/are involved?
- Given the beneficiary's needs and the trust's assets, which of the permissible distributions are in the beneficiary's best interest?

But Consider Also the "Resource" Limit

- Children's Medicaid, Pregnant Women's Medicaid, Parents and Caretakers Medicaid, and Breast and Cervical Cancer Medicaid have no resource limits
- Texas Long-Term Care Medicaid programs not requiring SSI eligibility allow transfers to UTMA accounts for persons under age 21 with no transfer penalty
- Texas Long-Term Care Medicaid programs have a resource limit of $2,000 for unmarried persons (and some who are married but separated); but ineligible spouses of married applicants can keep more—sometimes a lot more
