

Post-Production Cost Deductions from Royalty and Why it Matters to the Midstream Sector

Gas and Power Institute, October 27, 2023

Brandon Durrett | San Antonio

© 2022 JACKSON WALKER LLP

1

Key Question

Does the royalty owner bear its share of post-production costs (“PPCs”) such that the operator may deduct them from royalty payments?

2

Yes, as a default rule, royalty owners bear PPCs unless applicable lease or contract language says otherwise.

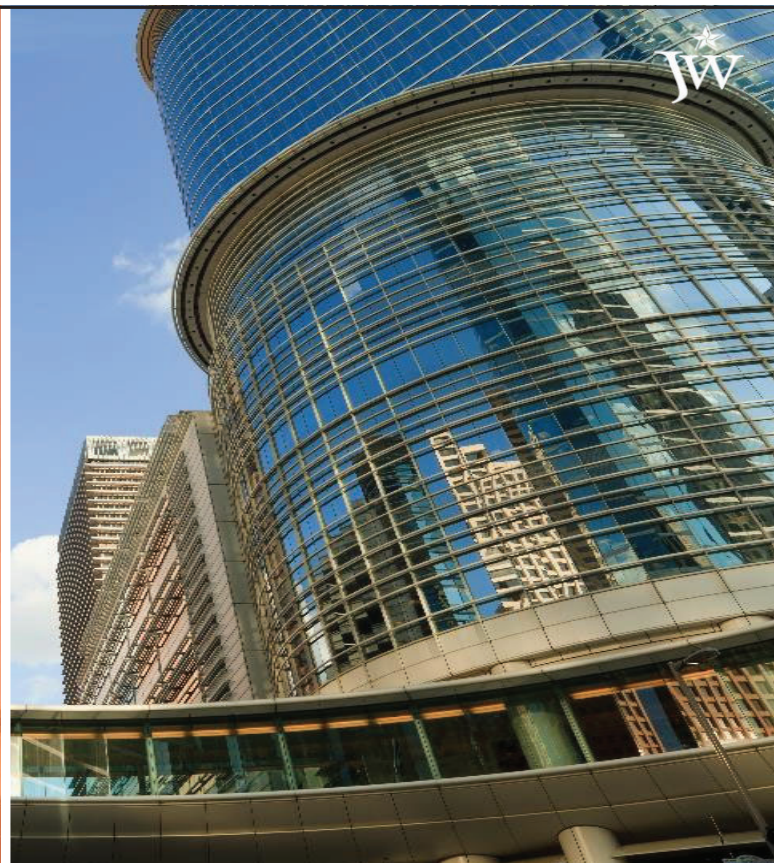

What's a PPC?

- Costs incurred to enhance the value or marketability of oil and gas after it has been produced at the well
- Expenses incurred on production downstream of the wellhead, generally before sale
- Commonly include costs for transportation, gathering, compression, separation, dehydration, processing, and marketing

- Seminal Texas cases
- Four recent cases that analyze whether post-production costs are deductible from royalties under particular contract language
- Two recent cases that analyze “add-back” clauses in the context of post-production cost deductibility

AUSTIN | DALLAS | FORT WORTH | HOUSTON | SAN ANGELO | SAN ANTONIO | TEXARKANA | JW.com

5

6

Find the full text of this and thousands of other resources from leading experts in dozens of legal practice areas in the UT Law CLE eLibrary \(utcle.org/elibrary\)

Title search: Post-Production Cost Deductions from Royalty and Why it Matters to the Midstream Sector

Also available as part of the eCourse

2023 Gas and Power eConference

First appeared as part of the conference materials for the 2023 Gas and Power Institute session

"Post-Production Cost Deductions from Royalty and Why it Matters to the Midstream Sector"